Adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock.

THE RETROCESSION OF ALEXANDRIA—WAS IT VALID?

In the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday the case of Phillips against Bayne was taken up, involving the question of the validity of the act of retrocession of 1848 of Alexandria to the States of Virginia. The plaintiff in error insists that the taxes laid by the State upon his property in Alexandria are invalid, because the property is firefast still within the District of Columbis, the act of retrocession being involved. The principle upon which the theory proceeds is, that legislative functions are incapable of being delegated to the people. Where an act is a general one in its nature, and, like other general laws, affect the body of the people, it is unconstitional to submit to a vote of either all or part of the people. The same question of the wisdom or policy of the, law upon which the inw-maker votes in the passage of the law, and to make the result of that vote the condition upon which the measures becoming a law is to depend. In brief, it is insisted that the passage of the law, subject to syproval or rejection by a popular vote, was unconstitutional, and the vote of the people did not cure the defect, and therefore there was no retrocession, and no change of jurisdiction followed. On the part of the tax officer, it is contended that no action lies; that the individual is not in a position to raise the question sought to be tested. Both sovereignities united in uphinding the retrocession and the authority of the officer, and from their joint will there can be no appeal.

Messra W. Willoughby, Shellabarger, and Wilson, appeared for plaintiffs in error, and Mr. R. T. Daniel for defendant.

Talbot vs. Potomac Steam Navigation Company. The lacts in this case are these: On the 21th of August, 1874, the plaintiff purchased of the above-named company a round-trip ticket for Hackiston's Island, and went there on the steamer Pilot Boy. The captain of the Pilot Boy stated to plaintiff on the passage that his beat would leave the island at 8 a. m. the next day. By some means she left Blackiston's Island at 8 a. m., and the plaintiff being unadvised of the change of schedule, could not return to Washington by that trip. On the next trip of the boat the plaintiff endeavored to reach home on the ticket he had previously purchased, but the captain had him forcibly elected, requiring his walking ten miles through the broiling sun to the nearest landing. He new brings aution for the recovery of such damages as the court may see fit to award him. The case was respited and will be resumed on Menday.
